Seq., a resident of Glenville, Conn, from the Intelligeneer of February 21st, 1864.

We yesterday received a letter from Frank Linn at whose house James Ammons was shot and killed by John Coss, on Tuesday night last (Feb. 17, 1864), in which an entirely different version of the affair is given. The statement made by Linn is about as follows: One of Linn's brothers and a brother of his wife (and also of the deceased) had returned home from the army, and it was decided to give them a dancing party to which a few of their friends and acquaintance were invited. The evening passed off pleasantly until John Coss made his appearance with two soldiers belonging to his Company. As they were not invited, Coss went to Linn and his wife and asked if there was any objection to himself and friends remaining in the house, to which answer was made that they were welcome as long as they behaved them-selves. The dancing then commenced and nothing unusual occurred until about two o'clock, when Coss said to Anmons, "let's have the next dance." Ammons replici "talk mough.
